Microchanneling (Collagen Induction)

Microchanneling is a minimally invasive skin rejuvenation treatment that uses a precision device to create tiny micro-channels in the skin's surface. This triggers the body's natural repair response and helps improve overall tone, texture, and firmness.

What it helps with

- Fine lines and crepey texture
- Enlarged-looking pores
- Acne scarring and uneven texture
- Sun damage and dullness
- Mild laxity and overall skin quality
- Stretch marks (on appropriate areas)

How it works

Those micro-channels signal your skin to produce new collagen and elastin over time. Targeted serums can also be applied during the treatment to support hydration and recovery.

What to expect

- Treatment time: ~45–60 minutes (varies by area)

- Sensation: mild “scratchy” or vibrating feeling (topical numbing may be used depending on intensity)
- Downtime: typically 24–72 hours of redness/tightness; light flaking can happen
- Results: skin can look brighter within days, with best improvements building over a series as collagen remodeling occurs

Recommended series

For most goals, a series of 3–6 treatments spaced about 4–6 weeks apart delivers the best results, followed by maintenance as needed.

Aftercare (important)

- Keep skin clean and hydrated for the first 24 hours
- Avoid makeup for 24 hours (or as instructed)
- Avoid retinoids/exfoliants for 3–5 days (AHA/BHA, retinol, tretinoin, benzoyl peroxide)
- Avoid intense heat/sweating for 24–48 hours (sauna, hot yoga, heavy workouts)
- Wear SPF daily and avoid direct sun exposure while healing

Good to know

- Microchanneling is a great option when you want visible skin quality improvement without significant downtime.
- Many clients see the best results when paired with a customized skincare plan and consistent SPF.

Contraindications

When to postpone

Microchanneling may not be recommended if you currently have:

- Active acne breakouts, open lesions, or an active rash
- Sunburn or significant irritation
- Certain skin infections or recent aggressive treatments (we'll review your skin and home routine first)
