

CONSULTATION FIRST

Is PRF right for you?

PRF may be worth discussing if you prefer a client-derived option and want a conservative plan rather than dramatic correction. It is not automatically the right choice for every concern or treatment area.

Your provider will review

- Your goals and the exact area you want to discuss
- Medical history, medications, supplements and prior procedures
- Active skin concerns, healing history and recovery preferences
- Whether PRF, EZ Gel, another option or no treatment is most appropriate

A small blood draw is part of every PRF appointment.

Depending on the service, temporary redness, swelling, tenderness, bruising, pinpoint bleeding, tightness or peeling may occur. Injectable procedures have additional risks that Diana, RN reviews during the clinical consultation.

Bring questions. We will explain the alternatives - and tell you when PRF is not the right fit.

CLIENT-DERIVED OPTIONS - DISTINCT PREPARATION, PLACEMENT AND PROVIDER ROLES

THE FOUNDATION

What is PRF?

Platelet-rich fibrin (PRF) is prepared from a small sample of your own blood. After centrifugation, the platelet- and fibrin-rich portion is used the same day in a provider-directed aesthetic plan.

At House of Rose, PRF may remain liquid for an injectable treatment, be prepared into a soft EZ Gel, or be applied topically during a selected needling appointment.

Why the distinction matters

Injectable PRF, EZ Gel and topical PRF are not interchangeable. They have different preparation, placement and provider requirements. PRF is also not the same as hyaluronic acid dermal filler.

A simple same-day pathway

1. Consultation and candidacy review
2. Small blood draw and centrifuge preparation
3. Provider-selected PRF format and placement
4. Written aftercare and individualized follow-up

THREE CLEAR PATHS

How we use PRF

01 INJECTABLE PRF

Liquid PRF is placed by Diana Morrison, RN in provider-selected facial areas after a clinical consultation. It may be discussed for selected fine-line and delicate-area concerns when a subtle, gradual approach is appropriate.

02 EZ GEL BIO-FILLER

Part of the PRF preparation is converted into a soft, client-derived gel. EZ Gel may be considered for subtle, temporary volume in smile-line, lower-face or other provider-selected areas. It is not a structural replacement for every dermal filler.

03 MICRONEEDLING + TOPICAL PRF

Amber Mingione performs the needling service and applies PRF to the skin surface as a topical adjunct. The PRF is not injected, and House of Rose does not describe the device as delivering blood products into the skin.

The right path depends on the concern, the treatment area, your health history, your preferences and the provider's assessment.

REALISTIC EXPECTATIONS

What to expect

Before - consultation, health-history review and treatment-area assessment

During - small blood draw, same-day preparation and the selected service

After - written care instructions, recovery guidance and follow-up timing

Goals we may discuss

- The appearance of fine lines and overall skin quality
- Selected smile-line, lower-face or delicate-area concerns
- Subtle, temporary volume where clinically appropriate
- Texture-focused skin renewal with an appropriate needling service

Evidence, honestly

Research on platelet concentrates in facial aesthetics is encouraging, but preparation methods, protocols and outcomes vary. Any change may be gradual and temporary, and more than one visit may be discussed. No result is guaranteed.

Not every client is a candidate.

Medications, bleeding or clotting history, active skin concerns, pregnancy or breastfeeding, immune status and other health factors may change or delay the plan. Your provider makes the final decision after assessment.
